

VTNZ paints your town orange

Friday, 24 October 2008

New Zealand's largest independent vehicle testing company – VTNZ – is busy painting some very special parts of New Zealand orange.

VTNZ already has the largest network of vehicle testing stations in the country – offering their expert vehicle safety inspections to hundreds of thousands of New Zealanders every year.

And the VTNZ network gets even bigger from Labour Weekend with the addition of 13 “On Road” vehicle testing stations to the nationwide chain of outlets.

VTNZ currently provides independent vehicle testing under two brands – the distinctive orange of VTNZ's flagship brand and the smaller On Road network.

However our On Road customers have told us they would value being part of a bigger network of testing stations, offering more choice of locations for their safety inspections.

So we're bringing all our testing stations under the VTNZ brand.

The move means 79 stations across the country will now sport the distinctive VTNZ orange – and VTNZ are always adding to their network with three new stations currently being built.

It's a colour we're very proud of because VTNZ orange stands for the VTNZ guarantee of an expert team, expert service at an expert price.

When vehicle owners see the VTNZ orange they know they're getting a thorough, independent Warrant of Fitness inspection - backed by experience and a team of more than 1000 people across the country.

That's why drivers chose VTNZ last year for their Warrant of Fitness checks on nearly a million cars and more than 200,000 trucks and trailers.

VTNZ also offers a range of other services including pre-purchase inspections, vehicle registrations, driver licensing services as well as commercial and heavy vehicle Certificate of Fitness checks.
